

Each of us is called to be an epiphany

AT Christmas we rejoiced that shepherds had come from the nearby hills to worship the newly-born Jesus. They were uneducated, poor Jews – a class despised because the task of shepherding prevented them from learning and observing the Jewish Law. And yet God chose them to be the first to welcome Christ as our saviour.

On today's feast of the Epiphany we celebrate God revealing himself to pagan wise men, who had travelled from a distant land. They were magi – highly respected scholars renowned for their knowledge of astrology. Building on that interest, God used a star to guide them from, possibly, modern Iraq or Iran to the babe at Bethlehem. They had to follow that star, make a long journey into the unknown, and then, when they reached the infant Jesus, make an enormous leap of faith. Seeing a normal baby they believed that he was truly God. The wise students of the stars worshipped the creator of heaven and earth.

Today we rejoice that right at the beginning of Christ's life God revealed himself to the pagan world. And the magi believed in him and welcomed him. At the very end of Matthew's Gospel the risen Lord commissioned the disciples to preach the Good News to the whole world. God became man because he wants people of every race and class to share his life and happiness. No one is excluded. That's the wonderful news we celebrate on the feast of the Epiphany.

Like the magi, we are called to make a journey of discovering Christ. God will lead each of us by a different route, depending on our backgrounds and interests. That was true for both the magi and the shepherds. Certainly all of us here have already set out on that journey of learning to know and love Christ. None of us has yet completed that journey, nor will we, till we see God face to face in heaven. In the meantime we, like the magi, must follow whatever star God uses to guide us. It's significant that for the magi to find Christ they required not only the guidance of a star, but also that of the scriptures, provided by Herod's religious advisers. Though human reason can teach us much about God, we need divine revelation to help us discover Christ and the wonder of the salvation he has planned for us.

So, with the magi and shepherds, come, let us adore the babe who is the Son of God.

And especially on the feast of the Epiphany let us rejoice that God has revealed himself to the pagan world and wants all of us to be saved, no matter our background. After all, this feast is not just about God offering salvation to the magi, but to us, who are of pagan, not Jewish stock. A final thought. Each of us is called to be an epiphany – someone revealing what it means to love and follow Christ. Our lives may be the only way most people will get to know what it means to be a Christian.

New translation into English of the Roman Missal. The latest edition of the Missale Romanum was published in 2002. The English translations we use in the Mass at the moment are those produced by the International Commission on English in the Liturgy (ICEL) in the 1970s. ICEL has revised the translations to include new texts in the Missale Romanum and to conform to current requirements for translations. The new translation is likely to be brought into use before the end of 2010, and the diocese is organising a series of study days, one of which will be held in Leicester at St Patrick's Parish Hall, Beaumont Leys Lane, on Saturday 30 January, from 10am to 3:30pm. If you wish to go, please contact Janet Hornsby at the Diocesan Centre, Mackworth on 01332 293833 ext 820, or janet.hornsby@nottingham-des.org.uk. What do we know about the liturgy of the church in Rome to around 600? How we respond to this question affects our interpretation of the development of Western liturgy in this period and enables us to evaluate the Roman tradition with that of other major sees. Surprisingly there has been very little recent scholarship on some of the key topics and a conference at Blackfriars, Oxford, on Saturday 27 February, will present fresh research from leading scholars. Details from <http://www.bfriars.ox.ac.uk/> and go to 'Upcoming events'.

Refugee Action is an independent, national charity working to enable refugees to build new lives in the UK. They can now make referrals for food, clothing, household items and baby equipment to Open Hands Trust on Highfield Street. If you know of anyone who would benefit from these services, please contact Open Hands at 53 Upper Tichborne St (tel 255 8672). There are more details on the noticeboard in the Narthex at the back of the church.
