

Risen Indeed

ONE Easter, six years ago, with some of the friars at our priory in Oxford, I watched the Pope's traditional Easter blessing urbi et orbi (to the City and to the World). The programme was followed immediately by something not in quite the same vein, but close enough: The Opera Babes in the Holy Land. One of the friars had been to university with one of the Opera Babes, and was naturally very excited. The rest were mystified, yet intrigued.

The Opera Babes, in case you don't know, are two talented young ladies who sing opera and operatic songs. Initially, many of the links in the programme were a little tenuous: watching the moon set over Lake Galilee segues into Claire de lune. That sort of thing. But later, when they got to Jerusalem, to the church of the Holy Sepulchre, one the 'babes' (the agnostic one) put her hand into the hole at the base of an altar, through which she touched the top of the granite spur which is Calvary. And she burst into tears. She was moved by the faith of the pilgrims; moved by the events of Calvary and the Tomb.

The Opera Babes you could say, were the catalyst to my own pilgrimage to the Holy Land – something I hadn't dared contemplate before, being put off by the risks. There the sepulchre still stands, and one still has to stoop to enter, just like the two disciples who stooped and saw the linen cloths lying, and the napkin which had been around Our Lord's head rolled up in a place by itself. The disciples went in and believed – for 'as yet they did not know the scripture, that He must rise from the dead.'

In the sepulchre, a red velvety cloth hangs beneath the icon of Christ, touching the marble slab which now covers the shelf on which Our Lord's body had lain. On the cloth is a small cross, and the words in Greek, XPICTOC ANECTH (Khristos anestē, Christ is risen!). And kneeling to kiss the slab, believers whisper in veneration, Alēthōs anestē! (He is risen indeed!). Here, like many pilgrims before them, over two thousand years, the Opera Babes found faith also.

This is not an ordinary tomb. Its occupant is gone. As the angel said, 'Why do you seek the Living One among the dead? He is not here. He is risen!' Happy Easter to all of you.

Christ is risen, Alleluia!
He is risen indeed, Alleluia, Alleluia!

The Prison Outreach Ministry of "Our Lady of the Assumption" Catholic Church in Chania, Crete, Greece, would like to thank all who have contributed to "Light-Bearers Ministries U.K." for your great generosity in providing 5 Holy Bibles. This is a truly wonderful gift and is greatly appreciated. The prison ministry in Chania has been operating for many years; indeed one lady has been visiting for over 30 years. The prison we visit is for male prisoners, and we meet people from many parts of the world. We are regularly asked for Bibles, and as we rely totally on donations to meet demand, you can readily understand how much your donation is valued. We thank you again for helping those in prison, and pray God's blessing on you all for your kindness. With our best wishes to you all – Fr. Peter, Fr. Angelo, Eileen and Linda.
