

After almost twenty years away, I've had the opportunity to visit my home country of South Africa twice this year. Both have been difficult in various ways, and both have also been eye-opening.

When I left South Africa, it laboured under the awful regime of Apartheid, with the largest part of the country's population kept out by law from government and from the best the country had to offer. A scared white minority clung onto power and enjoyed a prosperity they denied to others.

It might seem that white South Africans in those days had it good, but they didn't really benefit from the situation. There were all sorts of indicators that the society was diseased. South Africa was, for example, the worst place in the world for "family suicides" where one family member – usually, but not always, the father – kills the rest of the family and then himself. My father remembers, when we landed in Heathrow to begin our life in Britain, feeling like a weight had lifted from his shoulders. The reason for that terrible sense of tension in people who seemed to have it all is simple. They had no real hope, only a fear that one day their privileged position would be taken from them.

South Africa today is still a very troubled place. The biggest spectre which haunts South African society and threatens to destroy so much that is good there is AIDS. By some estimates, more than a third of the population is HIV positive. One of my friends told me that of the 30-odd people in her class when she finished school, only eight are still alive.

Crime is a terrible problem in some areas. It's not all that hard to see why. Some parts of the country are desperately poor, with more than 70% unemployment. I found it painful to see that when we put out rubbish out for collection, groups of men would sift through it, looking for scraps of food or things that they could use or sell.

It's still a politically volatile place, too. Every night on the television, another demonstration or strike would be reported. That might make other people feel really unsettled. To me, though, it was a sign of something much more positive. Yes, the people were unhappy, and they didn't always demonstrate peacefully. But they showed something that white South Africa never knew, and that I rarely see in Britain either. They have hope.

Hope is an extremely uncomfortable virtue. True hope doesn't make you contented with your current lot. On the contrary, hope is about a sense that things should be different, that this world is not the just and loving place it should be, along with the trust in God that He will transform things, make all things new. Hope, then, is the virtue of the person who hungers and thirsts after justice, knowing that that hunger, that thirst, will be satisfied.

So the impressive thing that I found in South Africa, that I always found there once I escaped from the little "whites only" bubble that most South Africans lived in when I was growing up, is that the people have a great sense of hope. They may have all kinds of troubles, but they believe that things can be different, that justice and right can be achieved with God's help.

The United Kingdom may be a far less troubled society, but it is a long way from being a truly just one. What is sad is that people have so little hope. I'm not saying I'd like to see demonstrations in Leicester on the BBC news every night, but we could all do with being more aware of the troubles in our city and in our country, and being more passionate about doing something about them. God will transform Leicester too!

Please pray for the Pope's intentions this month. General: That public opinion may be more aware of the problem of millions of displaced persons and refugees and that concrete solutions may be found for their often tragic situation. Mission: That those Christians who are discriminated against and persecuted in many countries because of the name of Christ may have their human rights, equality and religious freedom recognized, in order to be able to live and profess their own faith freely.

Our new bells will be consecrated by Bishop Malcolm after the 11:00 Mass on Sunday 13 September. The bishop will do this on the roof of Blackfriars Hall, and everyone will be able to see the action on a large screen inside the hall itself. After the consecration, there will be a party for all the parish.

Entrance Antiphon:	God, come to my help. Lord, quickly give me assistance. You are the one who helps me and sets me free: Lord, do not be long in coming.
1st Reading:	Exodus 16: 2-4. 12-15
Psalm Response:	The Lord gave them the bread of heaven. (Ps 78).
2nd Reading:	Ephesians 4: 17.20-24
Alleluia:	Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceeds from the mouth of God.
Gospel:	John 6: 24-35
Communion Antiphon:	Either – You gave us bread from heaven, Lord: a sweet-tasting bread that was very good to eat. Or – The Lord says: I am the bread of life. A man who comes to me will not go away hungry, and no one who believes in me will thirst.

MONEY MATTERS: Last Weekend's collections – Offertory Collection £1029.41. Over the last three weeks – SVP £28.39; Friends of Holy Cross £9.74; Holy Souls £6.88; Crib restoration £4.22.

Very many thanks for your continuing generosity.

Agape in a time of Swine Flu: To reduce the risk of spreading infections,

1. Please stay at home if you have flu-like symptoms;
2. The chalice will not be offered to non-celebrants;
3. Shaking hands at the sign of peace is suspended.

These measures will remain only for the time being. Do please note that you receive the whole Christ - Body, Blood, Soul and Divinity - when you receive the Host alone. So remember to wash your hands, and also wash your souls with Confession. That advice applies even when there's no Swine Flu.

Today's Gospel

First Friday Coffee Morning: This coming Friday, at 10:30am in the Church Hall. Tea & scones or coffee & cake, a chance to chat with other weekday Mass-goers and members of the Community; and, of course, a raffle. Money raised goes towards the care and maintenance of the church fabric. More volunteers would be appreciated.

Being busy on a Sunday morning with Mass, we friars would appreciate volunteers to cook lunch for us on Sundays. It needn't be anything fancy, all the ingredients are provided, and your turn wouldn't come round more than once a month. If you would like to volunteer, please contact Fr Peter (Tel. 252 1512).

Churches Together in Leicester City Centre will meet at St Margaret's Church of England this Thursday at 12:30pm. All are welcome.
